Original publisher: Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala. : Center for Strategy and Technology, Air War College, Air University, 1998 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)54756694 Subject: United States -- Military policy. Excerpt: . . . the following conditions apply: political considerations threaten to impede effective use of force; a clear and quick military win is not attainable; and public and congressional opinion is indifferent or hostile to the purpose for which force is being used. In effect, the Powell doctrine, like Weinbergers, not only places considerations of feasibility over those of desirability when it comes to using force. In deciding when and how to employ US forces, the administration declares, a clear distinction must be made between vital interests (those of broad overriding importance to the survival, security, and vitality of our national entity), important interests (those that do not affect our survival but that do affect our national well-being and the character of the world in which we live), and humanitarian interests. In the case of vital interests, use of force will be decisive and, if necessary, unilateral. With...
