Three gales of unequalled fury and destructiveness, have swept along our coast, carrying desolation and death in their stormy pathway, and overwhelming many families in the deepest mourning. Many who entered upon the month of December with a fair prospect of enjoying a happy new year, and perhaps a long life, now sleep in the bosom of the great deep with the sea-weed wrapped around them, or have been tossed on shore by the bellowing surges, and all bruised and mangled, have been followed, perhaps by strangers, to an untimely grave. Often as we have been called to weep with those who have wept over the sad wreck of human hope, we have seldom met with any thing so well calculated to excite the sympathy of all the friends of humanity, as the melancholy events which we have recorded below. In giving the history of the late dreadful shipwrecks, we propose to speak of the devastations of the three gales separately, first inserting a list, as complete as possible, of all the vessels wrecked or damaged; and then detailing some...
